General Session Panel Discussion:

We're in This Together: Navigating the Changing Shape and Boundaries of Medical Regulation

Regulating medicine in today's fast-changing health-care environment brings with it new, complex interactions with external stakeholders. Three leading experts will discuss examples of significant shifts in the landscape for medical regulation, including the development of the Interstate Medical Licensure Compact, the recent North Carolina State Board of Dental Examiners v. Federal Trade Commission (FTC) case and the rise of education and CME co-sponsorship as core components of medical regulation. In each case, factors are emerging that portend long-range changes in the way medical regulation is approached – including the way regulators work with other stakeholders. New coalitions and alliances are forming...new ways of doing business together...What does it all mean for our future?
